TOM HUGHES IN AMERICA.

Extract From an Address at the Opening of the Cincinnati Exposition, September 9.

Well, now my friends, let me say again, you could not have invited us to any occasion—to any great public ceremony—which would have pleased us more than this, at which we have the honor to be present here to-night. When I look around I feel that very few of you are able to remember the first great exhibition of 1851, which was held in London. It was the inauguration of all such exhibitions as that which we see and admire here to-night and Englishmen are very proud that they happen to be the first in this great world-wide movement [Applause.] Well, my friends, in 1851 it was supposed—a great many persons were very sanguine that it would prove to be a fact—that with that great exhibition, and with the exhibitions that would follow it so shortly, and several of the most splendid of which have been held in this country, the era of peace and goodwill was going to set in for all mankind. Well, my friends, that expectation, as you all know, has been sadly disappointed. The era of peace and goodwill did not set in 1851. I fear there are very few signs in the Old World at any rate, though I hope there may be some in this, that that era has already set in or is about to set in. Although the inauguration of the great exhibition in 1851 did not bring in the era of peace and goodwill everybody now confesses that it did a great deal to forward that immense movement, which we feel is spreading in all the nations of the world to-day. We all feel that but for such exhibitions as these the wonderful improvement in the trade and commerce of the world, which have startled I believe, all of us in the last few years, would not have taken place.

The most valuable effect of such exhibitions, because it is necessary if they are to have their highest influence upon nations, is that not only the productions of earth, not only the productions of the great staple manufactures, should be constantly represented at them with all their improvements, but it is necessary that a very large proportion of those institutions should be devoted to art. It is necessary, my friends, if society is to be raised, as we hope that it will be, that there should be a distinct acknowledgment that the cultivation of beauty is a necessity of our times for all nations. I believe it to be, my friends, a necessity of human life.

I am quite sure that such exhibitions as these will soon lead you to feel that it is a necessity for you to set an example and produce a beautiful and healthful manufacturing town. Now I, coming from a great manufacturing town, am enabled to say that such a town exists at present. In England I am happy to say that the feeling is aroused. The great manufacturing towns of England are beginning to have it strongly. They are beginning to make all their manufactories burn their smoke; they are endeavoring to make those great industrial marts beautiful in order, not only that those who have wealth and live in the suburbs may enjoy artistic works, but also that those who live in the cities, even the poorest of them, may live among beautiful and satisfactory surroundings.

Winter Dairying.

Country Gentleman.

The better class of farmers in the United States are beginning to demand good fresh butter instead of the salted article which has hitherto been eaten through the winter months. In consequence, those farmers who try to please the palate by producing a sweet, nutty-tasting commodity, will reap their reward by receiving a remunerating price. Setting aside fancy prices it is certain that a good fair rate will always be paid for butter which can be depended upon to come hand weekly in uniform quality. The best buttermaker in the United States falls unless the cows are fed properly, therefore there must be right sort of food. The hay should be made from grass cut when in blossom, and this alone will do, but some corn meal and wheat bran will increase the cream and add to the rich flavor of the butter. Also the use of carrots will cause a greater flow of milk and there will be then the peculiarly fresh taste which characterizes butter when cows are in good pasture in June. Of course, comfortable stabling, cleanliness and exercise in a sheltered yard will be requisite for full success. The cows should have their calves in September or thereabouts, and the heifer calves from all good milkers should be raised, which can be done on the skimmed milk.

In the autumn there is no forage or food of any kind better for milk cows as a help to failing pasture than pumpkins. I have used them freely for years with the best results, and find the fear of the seeds all nonsense. At the present time I have a fine lot growing among the corn and about three acres planted near the barn, which together will be sufficient to last till Christmas, if I can secure a portion of them from frost. After the pumpkins are gone, carrots are better than any other variety of roots, and if fed till grass comes again there need be no loss of quality in the butter. The quantity of the milk will be equal to the best grass season, and will depend upon the cows. Any man having common sense, and managing properly, can obtain double the average given by cows of the kind usually met with, if he will buy good ones and breed from none but deep milkers, and from bulls which are from a deep milking strain.
